Introduction: The “Mulatto/a” Vengeance of ‘Haitian Exceptionalism’

Part One: Monstrous Hybridity and Enlightenment Literacy

1. Monstrous Hybridity in Colonial and Revolutionary Writing from Saint-Domingue

2. Baron de Vastey, Colonial Discourse, and the Global “Scientific” Sphere

3. Victor Hugo and the Rhetorical Possibilities of Monstrous Hybridity in 19th-century Revolutionary Fiction

Part Two: Transgressing the Trope of the Tropical Temptress

4. Moreau de Saint-Méry’s Daughter and the Anti-Slavery Muse of La Mulâtre comme il y a beaucoup de blanches (1803)

5. 'Born to Command:’ Leonora Sansay and the Paradoxes of Female Benevolence as Resistance in Zelica; the Creole

6. 'Theresa' to the Rescue!: African American Women’s Resistance and the Literary History of the Haitian Revolution

Part Three: The Trope of the Tragic "Mulatto/a" and the Haitian Revolution

7. “Black” Son, “White” Father: The Tragic “mulatto/a” and the Haitian Revolution in Victor Séjour’s ‘Le Mulâtre’

8. Between the Family and the Nation: Toussaint Louverture and the “Interracial” Family Romance of the Haitian Revolution

9. A ‘Quarrel Between Two Brothers:’ Eméric Bergeaud’s Ideal History of the Haitian Revolution

Part Four: Requiem for the 'Colored Historian;' or the 'Mulatto Legend of History'

10. The Color of History: The Transatlantic Abolitionist Movement and the ‘never-to-be-forgiven course of the mulattoes’

11. Victor Schoelcher, ‘L’Imagination Jaune,’ and the Francophone Genealogy of the ‘Mulatto Legend of History’

12. ‘Let us be humane after the victory:’ Pierre Faubert’s New Humanism

Coda: Today's Haitian Exceptionalism

Bibliography
Index